

Before entering into an insolvency arrangement it is important to have the value of the business and assets assessed in order that sensible and informed decisions can be made.

It is crucial that this work is done as early as possible while the directors and shareholders still maintain control.

Once an insolvency event commences, control may lay with the major creditor or a creditor committee. So called “Pre-Pack” administrations are also vulnerable to accusations of a transfer at an “undervalue” and should be supported by an Independent Valuation at all times.

Typically Amco would make an initial assessment of the company’s physical and intangible assets in order to generate a prospectus to be circulated on a confidential basis to likely buyers.

20 years of Valuation experience means that Amco are able to establish and subsequently reach the target market using a variety of promotional tools dependent on the situation.

Amco can manage the enquiries, accompany viewings as appropriate and manage requests for further information, through to negotiating a successful sale.

In the event that a sale cannot be made in the timescale available Amco are able to manage a piecemeal disposal of the company’s assets aiming to maximise the financial recovery. Our detailed investigation of the assets will put us in a unique position to market the assets quickly.

Amco work closely with a number of Insolvency Practices and financial service providers and in most cases would be able to direct you towards an expert that can deal effectively with your situation.
