

For immediate disposal: Intellectual Property Gas-Assisted Plastic Moulding Technology.

On behalf of the Liquidator, Chris Smith of Grant Thornton (Gibraltar) Michael Charles of Amco Agency Ltd has been instructed to sell the remaining IP.

Following a lengthy legal battle over patents relating to gas injected plastic moulding the remaining IP assets of Melea Limited, a Gibraltar company that licensed the Intellectual Property known as "Gain Technology" are now to be sold.

A Winding Up Order was made against Melea Limited in the Supreme Court of Gibraltar 2 November 2009, following a petition brought by U.K.-based Cinpres Gas Injection Ltd., the company's major creditor.

Melea Limited, the owner of the gas assisted injection moulding patents marketed by Gain Technologies Inc, and Cinpres had been involved in a series of legal challenges over patents relating to gas-assisted plastic moulding.

Cinpres v Melea is said to have been the longest running dispute in the English Patents Court. It started with proceedings dating back to 1991 and was still ongoing 16 years later.

Much of this technology has its' roots in work carried out for both companies by James Hendry described as the 'father' of gas-assisted injection moulding.

Michael Charles commented. "This technology is seen by many in the injection moulding trade as pivotal. Had it not evolved into a long running battle over ownership the processes would have significantly advanced."

"Our engagement is designed to ensure that all interested parties are considered before any transfer of assets is made"
